A ticket was put in the field by the Logan Club, bearing the name of Frank Squier, in opposition to T. L. Woodruff. One of the delegates denounced Mr. Woodruff and said he did not see why a man who worked and voted for Mayor Boody should be sent to a Republican State Convention. Mr. Woodruff repelled the attack and declared earnestly that not only did he vote for Mayor Schieren, but he worked hard for him, and referred to the Mayor himself. The delegates elected by the convention were instructed to support General Stewart L. Woodford as the candidate for Governor. There were contests in some of the other districts. The delegates in a number of them said that they would support a Brooklyn candidate if there was a chance for his nomination.

TAMMANY IN GREAT DISTRESS. 'DRY DOLLAR" SULLIVAN'S DISTRICT IS NOT THE ONLY ONE WHICH WILL SHOW HEAVY WIGWAM LOSSES.

Mayor Gilroy refused to take notice yesterday of he speering attack which Senator Timothy "Dry Dollar" Sullivan made on him at the meeting of the Tammany Hall Committee on Organization on Thurslay evening. Sullivan, when his district was reached, admitted that Tammany was not as strong there as last year, and gave as an excuse for it that the Mayor had appointed the Republican leader, Charles H. Murray, a Police Commissioner, and he was using his office against "the organization."

Sullivan's is not the only Assembly district which gave an increased Tammany Hall majority last Sullivan's is not the only Assembly history last gave an increased Tammany Hall majority last year which will show a failing off this year. From every district in the city come reports of dissension, friction and trouble. Much of the disaffection grows out of the corrupt and discreditable methods made use of by Tammany politicians for keeping up the organization. Its effect is to drive away respectable men from its support, and this, it is believed, will prove one of the main causes of Tammany disintegration. Clitzens with characters to sustain find that they cannot afford to maintain their allegiance to the Wigwam.

It is predicted that the vote next November will exhibit an immensy falling off of Tammany strength from this cause. The leaders are aware of this fact, and it is a subject for frequent and distressing consultation among the chiefs and their leutenants in every part of the city. FOR MAYOR. In their eager search for a candidate of respectahilty and fortune, whom they might induce to run for Mayor on their ticket, the Tammany leaders recently settled on George G. Haven, it has been recently settled on the work of the Wig-ported, and word was passed around inside the Wig-wam reservation that Mr. Haven was ready to accept the nomination. They made a mistake, however. Mr. Haven does not propose to lend his name or year. Just before starting for his country place at Lenox yesterday, he dictated this memorandum, and left it at his office, No. 32 Nassau-st., declining the dishonor of a Tammany Hall nomination:

This was excused by inexperienced enthusiasts on the ground that the organization was merely "provisional" and would do better later. And it has done better—that is, from the organization stand-point. My own notice for the primary of September II was dated on the 19th, and was not received until the very morning of the election. A resolution was introduced in the convention to instruct the delegation, but it was objected to, and amended to the effect that the delegates go uninstructed, and the resolution was finally withdrawn in the form of an instruction and placed in the form of a request; as expressing the sense of the convention. I was present at the convention. Will you kindly correct the error?

EMPIRE STATE POLITICS.

THE CANVASS AND THE CANDIDATES-WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS ARE SAYING. "It is not only a novel, but it is an encouraging sight," declares "The Syracuse Post," "when there is an eager rivalry for the Republican nomination for Governor of this State. There will be presented to the convention at Saratoga the names of more candidates for Governor than have been presented to a Republican convention for many years." "The Buffalo Enquirer" hears that Francis Hea-dricks is working not for the Gubernatorial nomination, but for the second place on the ticket. The platform of Cornelius N. Bilss, says "The New-York Commercial Advertiser," like that of all earnest, sincere Republicans, is anti-Plattism. "The Malone Pailadium" thus stands up for its candidate: "With unbounded respect for Mr. Morton and a high appreciation of his abilities, and also with recognition that Republicans here generally prefer him to any one except Judge Russell, it yet does not seem to us that his nomination would mean so much for the good of the party, and be as complete a response to the call that the hour puts upon Republicans to do the best thing possible in the circumstances, as would that of Judge Russell, Congressman Payne, says "The Geneva Courier," gives promise of taking a foremost position in the coming LIVth Congress, and will honor his con-

"The Fredonia Censor" expects that any man whom the Republican convention may nominate for Governor will be a great improvement upon the Governors the State has been having for the last

The State Convention will understand, says "The Gouverneur Northern Tribune," that Judge Russell is a candidate in fact and very much in earnest. His chances, declares "The Northern Tribune," seem to be as good as those of any other candidate. Congressman Francis Marvin, of the NVIIth District, having declined to run for the office again,

"The Middletown Times" urges that Benjamin B. Odell, jr., of Newburg, be nominated to succeed him. Mr. Odell is a member of the Republican State Com-Mr. Oden is a member of the republican state con-mittee. "The Times" says of him: "His conceded political sagacity and experience; his tact as a leader of the party, his large acquaintance in the district, and his standing as an active, energetic, progressive business men, all point to him as a sultable man to lead us on to victory and represent us creditably in the halls of Congress."

"The Albany Evening Journal" announces that Governor has completely collapsed.

"The Niagara Falls Gazette" finds that Colonel A. D. Shaw's chances for the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor are increasing, papers in all parts of the State recognizing him as a strong man and one thoroughly well qualified to fill the office.

The canvers of Mr. Morton for delegates to the State Convention is prolific of much discussion throughout the State. In fact, asserts "The Binghamton Evening Herald," more than New-York State—the Nation—looks with interest upon this struggle, which is that of the reputable element of the State with Thomas C. Platt.

These are the sentiments of "The Auburn Advertiser": "We doubt if any other name than that of Mr. Morton goes before the Republican State Convention for Governor. And we hope it will be G. W. Allen for Lieutenant-Governor. And so it looks just at present!"

The prediction of a Republican quoted in "The Rochester Union and Advertiser" is that when New-York is reached on the alphabetical list of counties on the first convention ballot, a motion will be made to make Morton's nomination unanimous.

In the judgment of "The New-York Press," all appearances indicate that Levi P. Morton, of Ellerslie, will have the honor of serving the people as the next Governor of New-York State.

The nomination of candidates for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, says "The Livingston Republican," will take the strain off the present situation. "The Republican" does not doubt that the convention will give Republicans candidates whom they can cheerfully support and triumphantly elect.

The only danger that threatens to impair the majestic proportions of the coming Republican victory in this State, says "The Brooklyn Times," is the suspicion that its action may be determined by machine manipulation. There should be no room or excuse for such a suspiction. "The Times" does not think that there will be.

"The Warwick Advertiser" finds that with the Democrats this fall it seems to be a clear case of the nomination seeking the man in both State and county politics.

We Americans know much of him, and are gratified at his success. It may enliven the House of Lords comfortable of steamers, the New-York, and under the American flag. Two things have emphasized vacations, their use and the abuse of some who take them. One, the criticism sent me from of both the Lords and the Commons, to find out American papers; the other, the death of now much progress the ending or mending of the House of Lords is making. Apparently no one John Newell. The critical journals say Depew is House of Lords is making. Apparently no one in the Upper House, and few in the Lower, believe there is much strength in the agitation. The English Radical is, after al., a sort of veneered Conservative. He seems almost incavable of overcoming his centuries-rooted veneration for old customs. He is Democratic to a degree in legislation for the masses, for the laborer, or the tenant, or any occupation or condition which can be helped by the Government, but stunds in awe of the Throne and the nobility. Rampant and boody Anarchy has frightened the property-holders and checked the democratic spirit all over Europe. Pande-stricken peoples are giving autocratic powers over the press, free speech and individual liberty in France, and leaning upon the strong arm of semi-military despotsm elsewhere to protect them against the secret and senseless outbreak of outrage and murder. The speech of the German Emperor at Königsberg was a nineteenth century declaration of the fourteenth century decraration of the fourteenth century decraration of the most intelligent of races, and of Europe generally, seemed to be, as I gathered from the press and people of all ranks and opinions, that we will not question the right so long as rulers are as capable and conscientious as you. They delight in his snubbing and lecturing the nobles, and seem to believe they, the people, are speaking through him. Mr. Roberts went over with me. I left him on the other side; the others named and not named had their summer abroad. There probably at no time has been so many railway managers on vacation. The strain of the year necessitated it. The only difference between the others and myself being that my movements and happenings received a notice and chronicling which they escape. and lecturing the nobles, and seem to believe they, the people, are speaking through him. Certainly this extraordinary utterance would not have had this reception four years ago. Another reason for flocking under the wings of a strong Government is the constant fear of a European war. An eminent diplomat said to me: 'Since the visit of the Russian fleet to Toulon, all the diplomacy of Europe is centred in the Mediterranean. Hence France is feverishly increasing her fleet, and England is in a panic over her sole reliance for protection at home and prestige abroad—the supremacy of her Navy.'

have made his career, he must at some period of the year lay down his work, go away, clear his brain and come back fresh. It is lamentable to see the number of promising men in our profession who are breaking down in the prime of life. No constitution is vigorous enough, or the gray matter of the brain elastic enough, to stand continuously the strain. The successful railway manager must keep his road popular with an exacting public, he must eatisfy the ever-increasing demand of localities for new depots and additional facilities; he must reveal to the press the things which he would like to keep; he must convince legislatures that it is against public policy to confiscate the earnings of the company, and city authorities that there is a point where the resources of his treasury are unequal to the demands for altering grades and constructing bridges; he must see that his rivals do not steal his business, and yet get rates sufficient for doing it; he must keep contented and yet efficient in their work tens of thousands of employes, and retain the confidence of his stockholders by earning dividends for them. If he does not keep his health and mental vigor no corporation wants him, and if he dies in the harness he goes to the other world happy in the certainty that his family will receive a handsomely engrossed series of complimentary resolutions. May we all postpone as long as possible the receipt of the resolutions. ANXIETY ABOUT THE TARIFF. was the anxiety about our tariff legislation. It was the one absorbing topic before the Wilson bill became a law. I met one of the oldest members of the House of Commons at luncheon, and he said: 'All I care about your country is, Are you going to let my wool into your market?' As he is one of the argest wool-growers in Great Britain, I suppose now he no longer has any envy of his American brother in the business. The condition of Europe for the last year and since the enactment of this measure demonstrates how dependent the industries and busi-ness of the Old World are upon the trade with the New. Our commercial depression has found its counterpart on the other side. The trade of nations has not yet adjusted itself to the instantaneous in world one market. Differences in cost of raw n terial, of labor and of living become inextricably jumbled and confused, and tariff laws and rev-enue restrictions have not wholly solved the problem enue restrictions have not wholly solved the problem. Unless we can protect ourselves in some way, the cheapest section of this market will govern every part of it. It is not a ghastly conceit, but a serious question, for the statesman and economist, if the people of China and India, who will work for 5 cents a day and can live on 3, are to supply the manufacturers of the future. What is mankind in our higher civilization and more difficult climate and conditions to find to do and how to live?

"Since the tariff question was settled there has been a wonderful revival of business both in England and on the Continent. The situation is not materially different from what it was under the much abused McKinley law, but the world believes there will be little change for many years. So, instead of waiting for a free-trade millennium, Europe is adjusting itself to the inevitable. During the depression manufacturers have found many economies which will cheapen production, and have discovered eaded and considerate of men. He said: 'Newell pression mandificturers have and have discovered which will cheapen production, and have discovered that there is a large constituency in America which will buy foreign goods at increased prices over the homemade article, even if no better. Our consuls told me and I saw everywhere signs of industry and prosperity, especially in Germany and England, which have not existed for years.

months' leave of absence and full salary, and he will come around all right.' Newell returned thoroughly himself, but it was for him work, work, work, days and nights, at his house, at his office, at his hotel and in his car. Twice afterward came the caution, then the too brief rest, and return to his old ways, until finally, in the very zenith of his usefulness and promise, he drops at his task as if struck by a rifle bullet. The gain is not worth the sacrifice and can be played with more pleasure to ourselves and profit to those we serve by cocasionally laying down the cards and taking healthful draughts of fresh air and enjoying God's opportunities. THE HOME RULE QUESTION. "It is conceded that the Rosebery Government will remain in power until next spring, and there are many chances for a much longer tenure. Its majority is narrow, and made up of elements which work to gether fairly well but cannot mingle. Its strength lies to a certain extent in its weakness. Each section knows it has nothing to hope for from the Tories, and while the daily threat of wrecking the lessons I bring back, is your unusual inquiry. I went to no out-of-the-way places, but gathered someadministration is a favorite method of all to gain their purposes, when danger really threatens them thing interesting to an American. I visited several of the famous watering places, and could not help Irish, the Welsh disestablishment, the Radical and labor members rush madly to the front to save granting to us healing springs which are quite as their opportunities. Home Rule, the part of their eading measure of the party, and there is no doubt of the honesty of the Government in its favor. But with only thirty Liberal votes in the House of Lords against nearly four hundred under Lord Salisbury, have not begun to utilize them for the enormous impetus which when developed they give to business of all kinds. You are astonished at these places at the capacity of the European stomach. The Old World may be effete and worn out, but the elasticity of its digestive apparatus we cannot hope to acquire for several hundred years. At Evian nine glasses of the water in the morning is the ordinary allowance, and one fairy-like looking lady, who was both a beauty and a belle, rejoiced in the consumption of eighteen. My friend asked me if I did not admire her. I told him yes before I knew her appetite for water, but since then she impressed me as a tank. against nearly four hundred under Lord Salisbury, the measure apparently cannot become a law without some great political revolution which scriously menaces the Lords.

"It would be folly for the Irish to attempt a Conservative alliance, for, while gaining nothing, they would allenate the great party which is perilling its existence for their measures—measures which England, Scotland and Wales are not moved to enthusiasm about. I judged that the more cautious and careful of the Liberal leaders hope to reach the Irish result through some sort of a federation scheme, covering the whole kingdom. This would enlist English, Scotch and Welsh activity and support, and though possibly under another name, yet in substance Ireland would realize the assirations of her patriots and statesmen in practical Home Rue. The carnest supporters of the Irish cause in America who have for so many years, with such liberality and loyalty, assisted their brethren across the sea can render the cause they have at heart no better service than to enforce the necessity of their friends making their fight along with the Liberal party and not outside of it or against it, and this is the emphatic onlinion of the Liberal leader and all true formation from well-informed sources.

LORD ROSEBERY AND HIS HOME. WHERE BOGUS ANTIQUITIES ARE MADE. "Lake Geneva and its beauties and the Castle of Chillon and its romance have been visited by too many for description to be interesting. Lausanne and Vevey are among the best places in Euwant to be sure, however, of your antiquity. They manufacture old armor at Liege, and fifteenth and sixteenth century furniture at Frankfort. An Eng-lish officer who was long resident in Persia said that in Teheran they make the Saracen guns and

LORD ROSEBERY AND HIS HOME. "The most interesting figure in English politics is Lord Rosebery. His genius, his wonderful success in all the aspirations of his life, his comparative youth, and a singular and fascinating combination of Scotch caution with audacity, makes a sporting people bet on his luck and the solid people confide in his judgment. He has not the hold upon the Non-Conformists and the middle class and labordraws to the party a portion of the support and much of the sympathy of those whom Mr. Glad-stone alleviated—the universities and the moneyed and business interests. A man's house marks his tastes and the direction of his energies. Lord Rosebery gave me a dinner, and I again had an opportunity of seeing his London house. While the portraits of eminent English statesmen are on his walls, and the hent of his mind and his marvellous industry is for

The best and most suggestive of the attention of all who pass from the horary to the dining-room. The best and most suggestive of Punch's' historical cartoons was 'Dropping the Pilot,' where the young Emperor dismissed Bismarck, and Lord Rosebery has the original drawing. The ship which carried Napoleon a prisoner to St. Helena stopped on its way at Portsmouth. As she lay at the wharf the Emperor would stand for hours by the gangway, gazing at the clouds and the crowd. An English artist of the day, unknown to Bonaparte, painted his portrait. It has been hidden away somewhere for years, and Lord Rosebery, who has long been in pursuit of it, has just secured it. It is full length, about half life-size, and presents the traditional conqueror as we know him by his picture. It is a sad figure. It is more, it is a tragical one. A theory was recently advanced that at Waterloo had passed the zenith of his powers, though still so young, and his mind was weakening. The lot of precoclous genius, also said to have been hyron's. Certainly the face in this most remarkable portrait has a vacant look. Life and fire and intellect are out of it. It is the was a submington had a great admirer in Lord Selbourne, the ancestor of the Marquis of Landsdowne. At the request of Selbourne he sat for a full-length portrait. In the sale of some of the Landsdowne, pictures the portrait appeared one day at a picture dealer's, and the next day occupied the place of tried different medicines, but none helped me. At last my mother heard of Hood's Sarsaparilla. After taking part of a bottle the sores began to heal, and after a short time I was completely cured. We keep it in the house most of the time. NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNF, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1894.-TWELVE PAGES.

"For awhile in England the Vigilant and her races took precedence of all other questions. The English of all classes are a sporting people, and enthusiastically devoted to it, while only a comparatively small portion of the American people care anything about it. The Prince of Wales is one of the most experienced and accomplished sportsmen in Europe. When we go there for any sort of contest, whether as Yale to Oxford or the ride team to Aldershot or with horses for the Derby or yachts for Cowes, the Americans who enter the sport are accepted by the English as the acknowledged representatives of our club and sporting life, and are rigorously judged by all the written and the more important unwritten laws of the game. There is everywhere a great deal of irritation growing out of these races at Cowes. I think the trouble is the result of untoward and unavoidable accidents. Mr. Gould certainly did everything porsible, but he was the victim of a series of misfortunes which could not be guarded against, but the critical judgment in the heated contests makes few allowances. Results decide the issues and form the opinions. Much more than the sport of the hour depends on these international sames. They count coormously in the relations of European peoples to each other and ours to Europe. the hour depends on these international sames. They count enormously in the relations of European peoples to each other and ours to Europe. I suggested, and it was approved in the most influential quarters, that there should be an understanding for the future between our two countries that all matches should be made only under the selection and approval of the rival squadrons. Then there would be authority and a representative committee on each side which would so settle disputes that misunderstandings would be impossible and the decision of the races universally accepted.

"Our kinsman across the water continues to be a serious person. The airy tritles and grotesque exaggerations of American fun he does not take to kindly. To relieve the strain of the centreboard incident. I advanced the theory that on account of the irritation felt by the English over the Mc-Kinley law and our tariff legislation, the British Government had caused the rocky reef to be placed in the channel which scraped the centreboard from the Vigitant. This was published in the Paris edition of "The New-York Heraid," and on several occasions I was taken to task by indignant friends over what they denounced as an infamous charge against their Government.

THE PASSING OF GLADSTONE. "One of the most remarkable and interesting revelations is the passing of Gladstone. He was the central figure in public life of Great Britain a year ago. Upon him and him alone depende the Government and its fate. His friends fearea year ago. Upon him and him alone depended the Government and its fate. His friends feared that his retirement meant the defeat of their party, and his enemies believed that if he was eliminated the Liberal programme would fail and the Conservatives return for a long leave of power. The terror on one side and the hilarious hopefulness on the other at the possible death or disability of the Grand Old Man have been for a long time the peculiar and prominent element of English politics. He suddenly announced his resignation and appointed his successor. Like a strong ship staggering under the blow of a tidal wave, the great party he had so long and triumphantly led trembled in every fibre with the pangs and dismemberment, and then shaking off the waters and breasting the storm continued its voyage with its freightage of the progress and democratic development of the country. Gladstone in a week became history. Philosophic reflections and theological speculations are the occupation and amusement of his declining years, but the party has swept past him, and he has lost sight of the party. A noble memory among the leaders of men, a splendid life crowned with the love and admiration of the world, its sunset reflects all the glorious light of its meridian.

A TRAIN FOR ANTI-MACHINE MEN, THEY WILL GO TO SARATOGA IN TWELVE SPECIAL CARS ON THE WEST

The delegates of the Anti-Machine Republican Organization to the Republican State Convention go to Saratoga on a special train arranged by Mr. Lambert, general manager of the West Shore Railroad, starting on Monday at 9 a. m. from the Weehawken station. The train will consist of twelve cars, two chair cars and ten day conches, capable of carrying a party of 500 delegates, alternates and other good Republicans. The chair cars were attached for the accommodation of the wives, daughters and women friends of the dele The cars of the train will be handsomely orated with flags and banners, suggestive of the

The returns of Monday's Anti-Machine primaries as reported up to a late hour last night at the headquarters showed a vote of over 7,000. This was regarded as an excellent percentage. Arrangements have been made for filing the returns with the County Clerk to-day.

A MERCHANT KILLS HIMSELF.

SUICIDE OF ADOLPH MARSILY-HE WAS TO START KNOWN MAN SHOOTS HIMSELF

IN CENTRAL PARK Adolph Marsily, a commission merchant at No. 18 Heaver-st., committed suicide early yesterday by shooting himself in the head at his home, No. 116 East Seventy-fourth-st. As far as can be learned the only cause for the suicide was ill health. For some time past he had been suffering greatly from rheumatism and kitney trouble. He intended to go to Europe next week on a business trip with his

On account of his illness the husband occupied a separate room on the second floor. About 4 o'clock in the morning Mrs. Marsily heard her husband leave his bed and move around the room. He went hack to bed again in a few minutes. She went into his room a short time later to inquire if he desired anything, but he was apparently sleeping soundly. The wife was aroused from sleep shortly after 5 o'clock by a muffled sound which came from the adjoining room. She hurried to her husband's bedeide. He lay face downward on the bed, with the clothes drawn up over his head and tightened about him. Blood was flowing from a hole in his right temple. A revolver was clutched in his hand and held close to his face.

Marsily died before the doctor arrived. He was about fifty-eight years old and was a Belgian by birth. His relatives live at Antwerp, and it was to that place he frequently made business irips.

Mrs. Marsily is president of the Ladies' Art Association, whose offices are at No. 22 East Fourteenthet.

Eark Policeman O'lirien vesterday morning found.

Park Policeman O'Brien yesterday morning found the body of a man who had committed suicide lying in the bushes in Central Park near Statisth-st, between Sixth and Seventh aves. He had shot himself through the right temple with a 22-calibre revolver. He was about sixty years old five feet eight inches tall, had gray hair, mustache and imperial, and wore a black diagonal suit, black soft hat and boots. In the suicide's pockets were naturalization papers made out in the name of Bernhardt Vogel.

A CLOAKMAKEE'S TROUBLES.

HE IS ACCUSED BY MEYER JONASSON & CO. OF LARCENY AND MAKES COMPLAINTS AGAINST THEM IN TURN.

Nathan Bender, thirty years old, of No. 65 Norfolk-st., is a contractor for Meyer Jonasson & Co., cloak manufacturers, of No. 258 Broadway. Yester-unanimous, as was done in the case of Judge Moore cloak manufacturers, of No. see Frontieval. He received the check from Superintendent Nasse, and then went to Assistant Superintendent Hertz to get more work. Hertz, he declares, swore at him, struck him in the face and knocked him down. book, containing a resolut of the work and the book. He was so weak that he had to be assisted to his home.

On Tuesday David Alman and Thomas Newman, two of Bender's employes, came to him as a committee from the other employes to demand their wages. Bender was in bed. The stories differ as to the interview. Bender says the two men told him that Mr. Jonasson had agreed to pay the money to the men upon the delivery of the goods and that he gave them the key to the factory so that they could get them. Alman and Newman say that he gave them the key voluntarily and told them to do anything they liked with the goods. They promptly put them in storage, and still hold them to satisfy their claim of $3.5, which Bender owes his twenty-five employes. They went to Mr. Jonasson, and told him they had the goods, but he refused to recognize them in the matter. On Wednesday Nasse called upon Bender, who was ill in bed, and tendered him the $150 check, but wanted a receipt in full. He refused to give it, because, he says, the firm owes him $200 on an old account. On Thursday an expressman came for the cloaks and returned Bender's pass book. Pailing to get the cloaks, Mr. Jonasson swore out the warrant and Bender was arrested. He was held for examination on October 3 in the Tombs Court yesterday.
